

Towards some peculiarities of production of Kartvelian grammatical quality forms

The author Merab Chukhua

TSU Arn. Chikobava Institute of Linguistics,
Georgia, Tbilisi, P. Ingoroqva str. #8

E-mail: merab.chukhua@tsu.ge / mchukhua@yahoo.com

Abstract.

It should be assumed that the tendency to break the more complex system of production of morphological quality forms in Kartvelian languages is caused by the general tendency to simplify the diverse linguistic system of the grammatical category of quality. From among the Kartvelian sub-systems, the unifying process of simplification affected the Georgian one the most, where only the three-member system functions unchanged from the old Georgian to the present day.